

ASE – member of the Global Federation of Competitiveness Councils (GFCC)

Starting May 2023, the Bucharest University of Economic Studies is a member of the Global Federation of Competitiveness Councils (GFCC) founded in 2010, in Washington, USA. GFCC is a network of experts, international organizations and corporations, universities and research institutes, who develop and implement concepts, initiatives and tools in the field of competitiveness, aimed at driving productivity and prosperity at local, regional and global levels.

ASE's membership is the result of its excellent positioning in the educational and research markets in South-Eastern Europe, of its state-of-the-art studies and research programs in areas such as cybersecurity, artificial intelligence, IoT, edtech, cleantech, circular economy, sustainable development, and digital transformation.

Ms. Deborah L. Wince-Smith, President of GFCC declared: "We are honored to have ASE in our community. Strategically positioned in Southeast Europe, ASE integrates tradition and innovation within its curriculum playing a pivotal role in regional development throughout the Black Sea and the Balkans. We firmly believe that ASE will bring valuable resources to our global community, particularly in the realm of promoting local economic development."

On behalf of ASE, PhD Prof. Constantin Marius Profireoiu, Vice-rector for International Relations, declared: "ASE is honored to be part of the GFCC, and our academic body is looking forward to providing intellectual contributions to this global community. Internationalization is a key component for the development of our university, and we are pleased to have the chance to link with the distinguished members of the GFCC".
